

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THERAPY IS BANNED?

ACLU of Rhode Island and 24 states¹ oppose therapy bans for causing harms like these:

The ACLU of Rhode Island opposes bans on “sexual orientation change efforts,” because they pose a “danger to First Amendment rights” and have “potential unintended consequences.” The practices that a therapy ban bars are “quite broad,” including “helping individuals who seek to resist acting on same-sex attractions for reasons such as a desire to maintain a marriage or to enter the seminary.” A ban sets the precedent for banning ANY controversial medical “therapy” including gender affirming blockers, hormones and surgeries.²

If a middle-aged mother who is 44 says to a therapist, “I love my husband and children, but recently I have felt attracted to someone else in my church. Please help me decrease my desires for the other person,” and if the other person is a man, the therapist can help her. But if the other person is a woman, the therapist has to refuse treatment or be criminalized.

A priest with same-sex desires could not get help to fulfill his priestly call to chastity.

Therapy bans require a therapist to discriminate based on sexual orientation. Example: effects of childhood sexual abuse can be treated if they are heterosexual, not if they are homosexual.

The American Psychological Association says in its APA Handbook of Sexuality and Psychology which it has declared “authoritative”³ that sexual and gender variations are not simply biologically caused. There are psychological causes⁴ such as childhood sexual abuse.⁵ One effect of childhood sexual abuse may be that the victim begins to experience same-sex attractions or behaviors. Is it more compassionate to help relieve these feelings or behaviors or to tell victims they have to live with them? A therapy ban requires the therapist to deny treatment to relieve the victim’s unwanted attractions and behaviors or the therapist will be criminalized.

More symptoms and recognized psychological disorders⁶ that may result from sexual abuse can be treated only if they are heterosexual.⁷

They include: unwanted emotional and sexual ties to a sexual abuser, desire to have sex with minors, compulsive sexual thoughts, pornography addiction, sexual addictions, and more.

Example: a therapist could help a man who is attracted to 5 year old girls but not 5 year old boys.

If a client might engage in illegal sexual behavior toward the same sex, the therapist could merely address illegal behavior but not treat the desire to engage in the behavior. This is dangerous.

A ban compels the therapist to violate the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment by prohibiting a therapist from offering services to LGB individuals that he offers to heterosexual clients. In this sense, the legislation demands discrimination based on sexual orientation.⁸

Gender dysphoric children and adolescents are legislated onto a path of:

experimental puberty blockers, toxic hormones that often sterilize them for life,⁹ having their breasts surgically removed, potential castration, a lifetime of being a medical patient,¹⁰ and a nearly 20 times higher rate of completed suicides even if they live in a liberal and affirming community,¹¹ all with the assumption minors are competent to choose these treatments, and all before they are old enough to drive—yet forbids them talk therapy to help them embrace their body.

The short and long-term risks of transitioning are sobering; hardly a cure for suicide.

- Lack of proven safety or long term benefit for minors. It’s not pro-science—it’s no science.¹²
- After short term satisfaction, regret and de-transitioning are not rare, but what’s gone is gone.¹³
- Parents can’t choose talk therapy for disturbed teens self-diagnosing from the internet.¹⁴

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THERAPY IS BANNED?

- Endocrine Society: talk therapy may be “useful and sufficient;” spares bodily harm.¹⁵ Bans forbid it.

Bans hide that same-sex attraction and gender variant feelings, unlike skin color, are not simply biologically caused and carry a high probability to decrease or change if allowed to.

As many as 98% of boys and 88% of girls¹⁶ and no less than 75% of gender dysphoric boys and girls will come to embrace their body if getting therapy for individual problems and not socially transitioned to live as the opposite sex.¹⁷

Same-sex attractions, behaviors, orientation identities, and questioning often change, mostly to or toward exclusive heterosexuality, for both men and women, adolescents and adults.

- Many Studies That Meet Rigorous Scientific Standards¹⁹

The often-referenced American Psychological Association Task Force Report (2009):²⁰

- Agrees with even the SPLC (2016)²¹ that contemporary change-allowing therapy does not use aversive methods that were mainstream but ineffective and in early years—before cell phones and the commercial internet.²² Organizational position papers frequently misrepresent those early methods as defining change-allowing therapy today, showing they lack basic knowledge about the therapy on which they are taking a position.
- Found no proof of harm²³ from change-allowing therapy and has not declared it unethical.
- Based its conclusions on anecdotal evidence, so it said its conclusions were “tentative”²⁴
- Could not conclude whether either LGB-affirmative therapy²⁵ or change-allowing therapy²⁶ was effective or safe. Recent reviews find LGBT-affirmative therapy still is not evidence-based.²⁷
- Based its conclusions on 2 invalid “key”²⁸ views that the APA Handbook (2014) has corrected:
 - Rigorous research now shows that sexual attraction does indeed change for many.²⁹
 - Childhood sexual abuse trauma can lead to same-sex attraction and behavior.³⁰
The APA Handbook is now not consistent in the view that same-sex sexuality is invariably normal and can never be caused by trauma. Trauma is cause for treatment.
 - In summary, the Task Force based its conclusions on anecdotal evidence and scientific error.
- Professional organization position statements often misrepresent the Task Force findings, are based on the same errors, and are not scientific evidence; they are opinion based on political activism within these guilds. Several professional organizations oppose bans.³¹
- One of the Task Force authors, Dr. Lee Beckstead, and a group of LGBT mental health professionals (the Reconciliation and Growth Project) want to promote ethical and balanced approaches to helping LGBT people in psychotherapy but never endorse any sort of ban.³²
- The ACLU of Rhode Island opposes bans, says only having licensing boards handle any problems can avert unintended consequences, and expresses confidence in licensing boards.³³
- APA presidents have provided successful orientation change therapy and said bans are wrong.³⁴

Bans forbid therapy that, when done right, is safe and effective and decreases shame.

Over a hundred years of research, including studies published in the American Psychological Association’s peer-reviewed journals by APA members, found that when the therapy is done right, it is effective.³⁵ Surveys of those who identify as LGBTQ (1) automatically exclude individuals who have safely and successfully changed and (2) often do not differentiate nonprofessional from professional services. Stories of “aversion therapy” are documented to be fraudulent in a report to the Federal Trade

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THERAPY IS BANNED?

Commission.³⁶ Evidence strongly suggests representatives of the NCLR or Trevor Project, Sam Brinton and Matt Shurka, have given fraudulent testimonies.³⁷ Therapists in the national professional organization, Alliance for Therapeutic Choice and Scientific Integrity, follow a code of ethics and use mainstream therapy methods.³⁸ Our clients do not believe they were born gay. They feel life-changing events led to their variation. Our therapy does not directly seek to change sexual orientation or gender identity or expression. However, some clients do see movement along the fluidity spectrum as a byproduct of addressing wounds from their earlier traumas. We use the same evidence-based therapy methods used in clinics around the world.

Government takes away freedoms and rights and opens up unintended consequences.

- Our clients have the same freedom and the right as everyone else to resolve unwanted feelings, love who they want, and choose their gender identity. No one should take that away from them.
- Some want to live and love according to their religious faith. No one should deny them that right. Several professional organizations oppose talk therapy bans and support a client's right to therapy for unwanted sexual and gender variations that is in accord with their religious faith.³⁹
- Most people by far who experience same-sex attraction also experience equal or greater opposite sex attraction according to the APA Handbook. Rigorous research has established this is true internationally, and their sexual attraction is capable of change. They are by far the norm, and exclusively gay individuals are the minority.⁴⁰ Many are in opposite-sex relationships with children because they prefer to be. But some seek therapy to decrease same-sex desires or behavior to save their marriages and be able to continue being full-time moms and dads. Bans deprive them of help, harming them, their spouses, and their children. This is a great injustice and harm.

Many targeted individuals will get therapy they do not want or no professional therapy at all.

- People who want change-allowing therapy would instead be coerced into therapy they do not want, LGBT-affirmative therapy, that offers them acceptance, help to clarify their sexual orientation identity or self-label (but not help to change behavior or desires), support to live with suffering from feelings they don't want, or body-harming treatments, but does not lift a finger to offer trauma treatments that are open to change.⁴¹ AB 2943 strips away their rights, deprives them of the life they choose, boxes them into a hopeless situation with depression and suicidality.
- But in states that have therapy bans, many therapists are afraid, because of the law and legal counsel, to see sexual or gender variant individuals whose goal is change, so many now get no professional mental health services. Like other individuals who experience these variations, some are sexual abuse victims and are suicidal. Bans are harmful and unjust.

Support for individuals who experience sexual or gender variations is not discrimination and banning therapy for some but fostering the universal value of kindness for all.

Bans attempt to coerce compliance with an ideology about sexual orientation and gender, supposing it is needed to support all LGBT people. But Dr. Caitlyn Ryan, who researches LGBT youth and works with the National Center for Lesbian Rights, says "evangelical families can positively influence health," and a theological shift is not necessary.⁴² Viewpoint discrimination among some professional organizations is group think, not science. In law, it is unconstitutional.⁴³

The ACLU of RI points out that the judges on a full federal appeals court “said there were ‘serious doubts’ that the California conversion therapy decision was correct, noting that ‘characterizing speech as conduct is a dubious constitutional enterprise.’”

⁵ Childhood sexual abuse may lead to same-sex sexuality: “The largest reviews of the literature in this area indicated that MSM [men who have sex with men] report rates of childhood sexual abuse that are approximately three times higher than that of the general male population (Purcell, Malow, Dolezal, & Carballo-Dieguez, 2004). One of the most methodologically rigorous studies in this area used a prospective longitudinal case-control design that involved following abused and matched nonabused children into adulthood 30 years later. It found that men with documented histories of childhood sexual abuse had 6.75 times greater odds than controls of reporting ever having same-sex sexual partners (H. W. Wilson & Widom, 2010). To help control for possible confounding factors, the authors conducted post hoc analyses controlling for number of lifetime sexual partners and sex work, but the association remained. The effect in women was smaller (odds ratio \square 2.11) and a statistical trend (p \square .09).” There are “associative and potentially causative links” between childhood sexual abuse and ever having a same-sex partner. ²⁹ Re sexual attraction change: APA Task Force (2009), p. 86. The Report stated, in its “scientific facts” that sexual attraction (“orientation”) does not change, and only “sexual identity” or “self-labeling” is “fluid” (p. 2, also pp. 10, 22, 30—footnote 19, 85). These statements no longer constitute scientifically “accurate information” that the Task Force Report calls for in its “Policy” (p. 92 and throughout the report). Reports of sexual attraction and behavior appear to be equated by the Report with mere identity or self labels, not the usual way these categories are regarded by researchers (pp. 14, 77).

³⁰ Re trauma as a cause of SSA: APA Task Force (2009), pp. 54-55, 63, 86. The APA Handbook (1:609-610) now is not consistent with the view that sexual orientation is invariably normal and can never be caused by trauma. It says childhood sexual abuse has “associative and potentially causal links” to ever having a same-sex partner.
